We Suggest

STAFF RECOMMENDATIONS: Our Favorite Cookbooks

The Wok* by J. Kenji López-Alt

The Wok has lots of detailed but easy-to-read recipes, explanations about ingredients, techniques, interesting history and cultural facts. It's basically a textbook for cooking!

— Cody Elliott, adult/teen services programmer, Newport Branch

Relish: My Life in the Kitchen* by Lucy Knisley

The daughter of a chef and a gourmet, Lucy Knisley loves food. A cartoonist, Lucy's memoir explores different moments in her life by food she was eating (and making) at the time. Each chapter includes an illustrated recipe, many of which are from her family!

— Molly Walker, children's services librarian, Cold Spring Branch

What's for Dessert* by Claire Saffitz

Claire shares so many delicious dessert recipes that are presented in an easy-to-follow and personable way for anyone to try. To accompany your reading and baking experience, I recommend checking out her YouTube channel (Claire Saffitz x Dessert Person).

— Stacey Venneman, early literacy outreach librarian

The Unofficial Studio Ghibli Cookbook* by Jessica Yun

Nothing is more fun than a themed night with your favorite anime. Pick a movie and make a snack (or meal) to go with it!

— Valerie Davis, Newport Branch Manager

Keep Reading!

The library's Summer Reading program is halfway through! Crush goals by channeling your inner dino: This year's theme is all about dinosaurs with the tagline "Roar, Soar, Read."

There's still time to meet Summer Reading goals, win prizes and enjoy fun programs this month. If you need a refresher, drop by any branch or visit www.cc-pl.org/summer-reading for age-specific information.

Patrons of all ages can track their reading with the Beanstack app or a paper log to win prizes big or small. Books, audiobooks, ebooks, graphic novels, books read to others and to you all count toward the goal.

For those in need of reading inspiration, make sure to ask library staff for recommendations! Using their library card, patrons can also access NoveList's database, which matches users with books based on titles and authors they already enjoy. Scroll through our website and you'll find posts with recommendations, from our What's on Your Shelf? series to themed posts and more. You can also visit www.cc-pl.org/recommendations for curated picks.

Soak in Art After Hours, continued from the cover

The Carrico/Fort Thomas Branch's annual Art After Hours program returns at 7 pm Friday, July 28 for an evening featuring the work of 16 regional artists. Ahead of the show, we caught up with two of the artists to chat about their work, inspirations and what they're bringing to Art After Hours.

One artist has been there since the first Art After Hours: Dr. Jerry Warner, a retired Northern Kentucky University biology professor who took to woodturning. Warner grew up on a small farm in Louisiana, where he says he learned to work with his hands. After retiring, Warner began taking woodworking classes. The rest is history.

Warner says Art After Hours has gained a reputation with people looking forward to attending year after year. He also loves returning to the event and visiting with those he doesn't get to see otherwise.

"It's very satisfying to have people come and appreciate what I do," says Warner of connecting with people who purchase his art. "And to be appreciated enough to buy it. I try to make enough money out of my sales to pay my expenses and the cost of doing it"

So far, he's been successful in that goal. According to Warner, compared to similar events, setting up at Art After Hours always goes smoothly. One Fort Thomas customer has bought over 20 of Warner's works, many of which she's purchased at Art After Hours.

Like Warner, Jeff Prather also works with his hands. Now based in Greendale, Indiana, Prather has been slinging clay for about 20 years. His work has been exhibited in galleries and stores across Greater Cincinnati. In the early 2000s, he even had his own storefront in Covington's Mainstrasse Village.

Prather says that seeing people buy his work encourages him to make more. He first got into pottery while studying at Bowling Green State University. After a friend of his wife who taught pottery gave him some clay, he was hooked.

"I bought a new wheel and I said to her, 'Now all I need is a kiln,'" recalls Prather. "She goes, 'Well there's a lady right down the street that's selling a kiln right now, too.' I go, 'Are you kidding me?' That is where it all started. And I haven't stopped since."

Prather says he'll be bringing some of his face jugs, which are molded to show various expressions, like a bemused mustached gentleman. They stand around 15-17 inches tall. Other items Prather says he'll likely bring are platters, vases and coffee mugs.

"It's really, really relaxing," says Prather. "It definitely makes you feel like you've accomplished something when you get done. A lot of people sit on the couch and watch TV but I sit in my basement and make pottery."

Warner's artistic process starts with a chainsaw. He uses regional hardwoods like cherry, walnut and maple to produce bowls, natural edge pieces, hollow vessels, writing pens and more.

"It's very satisfying work. I don't know what I would have done if I hadn't gotten into woodturning," says Warner. "But, I think for people who are retiring, it's very important to have something they have a passion for and can spend lots of time doing and enjoy doing. For me, woodturning has been that."
